Masters swimming

Herald-Leader / Frank Anderson

Coach Steve Stocksdale, who is nationally ranked in the backstroke himself, passes on a tip to team member Richard LaSota.

By Maret Thorpe
Herald-Leader contributing writer

Like any other swim team, the Lexington Masters have 1500 to 2000-yard workouts several times a week; attend local, regional and national meets; and earn rankings in their age groups. The difference is that these age groups start at age 25, instead of ending there.

In fact, the older swimmers often provide the most inspiration to the team. Coach Phil Wilder, 29, first became interested in Masters when he saw a 70-year-old swimmer run a mile on the beach, swim a mile in the ocean, and run another mile during a competition in California.

"I'd love to be in their kind of shape when I get older," he said.

Wilder was looking at Ed Fulmer, 70, who joined the team in November 1981. Fulmer swam as an undergraduate at Syracuse University, but he said "There was a long dry spell for 40-odd years when all I did was swim with my kids in Holiday Inn pools."

At a regional meet in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, he won ten events and came away with an award for high points in his age group. But what surprised Fulmer most was receiving a ninth place national ranking for his age group in the 50-meter backstroke, which isn't even his best stroke.

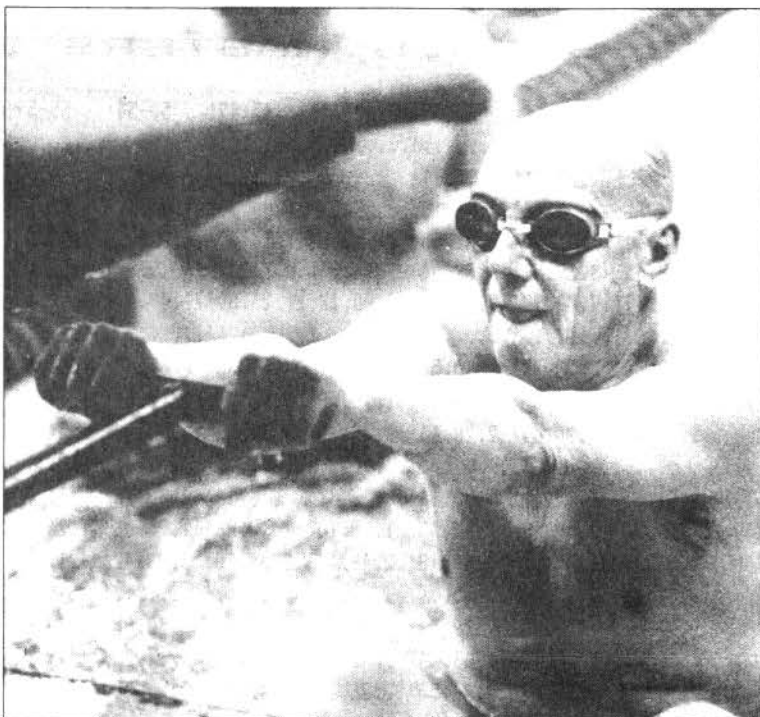

"The satisfaction I've gotten out of being able to compete in a young man's sport," Fulmer said, has been his biggest reward on the Masters team.

Mary Brock, 64, was the oldest member of the team before Fulmer joined. "She's an inspiration to me," Fulmer said, "I felt if she could do it, I could do it."

She did some competitive swimming in high school and worked her way through Eastern Kentucky University teaching swimming. An article about United States Masters Swimming caught her eye and she joined when the team formed at the YWCA pool in the fall of 1979.

"I was getting terribly out of condition and felt the need for physical activity," she said. Brock added she had no qualms about taking up swimming again, but she still gets "slightly nervous" at competitions.

Last year, 11,000 swimmers registered with United States Masters Swimming, Inc., and about 20 percent of them were over 60, according to Bill Tingley, chairman of the Local Masters Swim Committee.

70-year-old Ed Fulmer prepares to push off in the backstroke, his specialty

"These people, from what I've been able to gather, are the dedicated ones, because they're not working any more," Tingley said. He noted that the 25-29 age group also is growing rapidly as former college swimmers and injured runners sign up.

The Lexington Masters often worry that competition scares away potential members. "Masters is a bad word," Richard Peot, 27, said. "Fitness is actually the main emphasis and that misconception might be hurting us."

Coach Steve Stocksdale agreed, "Whenever you use the word competition, it really scares some of the recreational swimmers. They feel they would embarrass themselves."

The coaches encourage new members to attend at least one meet to see what it's like. Coach Diana Antonini, 37, pointed out, "After all that practice, why not try to win a medal?"

Local meets have a casual atmosphere. The heats match swimmers with similar times, then the officials rank the results within the age groups.

There's plenty of time to socialize while other swimmers compete and cheering often extends across team lines.

"Most people who say they don't want to compete get hooked because (the meets) are so much fun," Antonini said.

Taking a look at the competition is also reassuring, Antonini said. "There are the slender ones who look like athletes and there are the older guys with potbellies. We're all just older people."

National meets tend to be more competitive. Susan Cox, who is nationally ranked, said she gets her best times at these meets, where the heats are organized by age group and sex. "When you're on the block with someone your own age, you're going to try harder."

At local meets, 45-year-old Cox said, the team spreads its members out over many events to win a team trophy. Fewer members make it to the often distant national meets, and for those who do go, it's more of a personal effort to set the best time in one's specialty.

The results of every USMS-sanctioned meet are sent to the national registrar, who makes up the top ten rankings.

Sometimes, when relay teams are born, they come up one or two members short. "You pick the most likely person or the person with the shortest straw," said Antonini, laughing.

Gwen Babbage, who swims in the 45-49 age group, had been working on the butterfly for about a year when she joined a 200-meter medley relay team that ended up earning a No. 10 national ranking.

"That is very exciting. I never thought I'd have that. But that's because of all of us," Babbage said. Now she wants to take on the 400-meter individual medley. "It's a difficult race because you have to change strokes. You get your momentum going and you have to change."

Some Masters swimmers thrive on the competition. Steve Hellman, 38, swam for the University of Kentucky and had been away from the sport for 16 years.

When he began going to Masters meets, he found people he had competed against in the AAU and in college cheering for each other and those on other teams.

"I got my competitive spirit back. The body isn't the same, but the mind is," Hellman said.

People join the Masters team for many other reasons. Some swim to get in shape. Coaches say that swimming is much easier on the joints than running. Overweight people find they can move more easily in the water.

Like other athletes, the Masters swimmers think their sport is good for the mind as well as the body. Babbage said swimming helps relieve stress. "I've been really tired after work. I go swim and after about two laps that tiredness falls off like a cloak," she said.

Tita Arnold, a 41-year-old real estate broker, said she leaves a swim practice with more energy than she had before she came. "That's why I don't like to swim at night, because it revs me up too much."

Masters coaches practice and compete right along with team members, which is vastly different from coaching "age group," or younger swimmers.

All three Masters coaches agree that they have less of a leadership role than younger swimmers' coaches.

"Everybody here wants to be in the water. They're swimming because they enjoy it," Wilder said. "The work isn't nearly as strenuous. It's a lot more social."

The only prerequisite for joining the team is to swim 200 yards, or eight lengths of the pool. After this mini-tryout, a coach takes the swimmer's pulse to make sure he or she is not over-exerting.

After that, it's up to the individual to monitor his own pulse rate, and tailor the recommended workout to his abilities. But the coaches are always there to provide suggestions. "We try working with them on their stroke technique so they can become more efficient," Stocksdale, 28, said.

Other than the emphasis on technique, the coaches can't really explain why 13 team members hold national rankings. Stocksdale suggested, "Nobody's burned out on the sport so they don't leave it."

Team members say that the friendships they form are one of the best things about their team. The Columbia Steak House is a favorite hangout after practices, and members joke that they'll use any excuse to throw a party. "Of course we drink a lot of beer, but we burn it right off," Hellman said.

The Masters quickly point out that friendships extend across age groups. "The people in the older age groups are fun to be with and have a lot to offer," Peot said.

Evidently, the feeling is mutual. "It's a marvelous conditioning program. But I think more important to me are the friendships," said Fulmer, team president-elect.

"They've kind of gathered me in."

US MASTERS SWIMMING CHAMPIONSHIPS

On behalf of my colleagues in the Scottish Team, I would be grateful if you could put this letter forward in your next issue of Swim-Master. All of my colleagues had a good time and the friendship that we gained from the Championships could not be measured, everyone was so friendly and helpful. We found the the American people were very interested in this country and a number of enquiries regarding holidays were made, hopefully sufficient information was given to those interested. The championships themselves were so well organized with such few officials that I submitted a report to the Scottish Amateur Swimming Association on future ways of running their championships. Your officials were so helpful but yet so efficient they not only kept the meet going at a rapid pace, but they also worked very hard and I wish to congratulate them. It is hoped that we will be able to come back to your championships and wish to thank everyone concerned for making our visit such a wonderful experience. Should any of your competitors wish to compete in our Masters Swimming Championships which are held in Glasgow 29-30 October 1983, we could arrange for accommodation for them. Hope that some-day we will see you all in Scotland.

Sincerely, T. W. Robson (Tom Robson)
